Dickinson region receives grant to establish a new Early Head Start Program

It will be the first of its kind in southwestern North Dakota. The Community Action Partnership Agency (CAP) that runs the Head Start Program has been awarded a $1.17 million federal grant to start an Early Head Start program, which will benefit infants, toddlers, and pregnant women.

Once fully developed, the comprehensive child development program will serve Adams, Billings, Bowman, Dunn, Golden Valley, Hettinger, Slope, and Stark counties. The agency will provide periodic home-based services including home visits and socialization opportunities, as well as center-based services five days per week in Dickinson.

"We are very excited to see Sharon Hansen and her staff receive this important funding, which will benefit children and families in the southwestern part of the state. Their proposal competed against applicants from across the country," said Linda Rorman, State Head Start Collaboration Office administrator for the N.D. Department of Human Services.

Rorman said it has been almost 10 years since North Dakota received funding to expand Early Head Start Program services. There are currently seven other Early Head Start Programs in North Dakota.

CAP Head Start Director Sharon Hansen described the community support as incredible.

"Local partners pledged $275,000 in match, and over 40 community partners submitted letters of support or memorandums of agreement," Hansen said.

The new program will provide early childhood enrichment and learning activities, daily care, parenting education, comprehensive health and mental health services, including services for participating women before, during, and after pregnancy; nutrition, and other support for parents.

Hansen said the Community Action Partnership Agency has one year to complete planning and some new services may become available as early as the summer of 2010.

CAP has been the Head Start grantee in the region since 1991 and currently serves about 152 preschool children (ages 3-4) and their families.

Recent legislation fosters family connections

The Fostering Connections to Success and Increasing Adoptions Act of 2008 (Fostering Connections) is a federal law that includes important improvements for children and youth who are in foster care or at risk of entering foster care. Fostering Connections is considered by many to be the most influential piece of legislation passed affecting child welfare since the Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997. The act became law on October 7, 2008, when it was signed by President Bush after unanimously passing both the U.S. House and Senate.

Fostering Connections is already making a difference in North Dakota for children and youth in foster care by promoting permanent family unity through adoption or relative guardianship. Some foster care highlights of the law include:

- If a child will not be returning home within 30 days, a relative search will take place.
- Relatives must be notified when a child is removed from the parents custody.
- Reasonable efforts will be made to place siblings in the same foster care, relative, guardianship or adoptive placement, unless the well-being of a child is in jeopardy.
- Efforts must be made for a foster child attending an elementary or secondary school to remain in their original school. If a move is necessary, a transfer will be completed promptly, and educational records will be provided to the new school.
- A personalized transition plan will be developed 90-days before a foster child's 18th birthday to address housing, health insurance, education, employment service issues, and local opportunities for mentors.
- When licensing a relative's home, a waiver of non-safety related licensing standards may be granted on a case-by-case basis.

Fostering Connections has the potential to make a tremendous impact on adoptions of children in foster care too. Under the old Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) law of 1996, states could only claim reimbursement for special needs children adopted from foster care if their birth parents met certain eligibility requirements. For instance, if their income exceeded the requirements, the child would not qualify for Title IV-E funding. If this happened, the state and county would carry the full financial burden of any adoption subsidy negotiated with the adoptive family.

Fostering Connections changed this. It allows all children who meet special needs criteria to eventually be eligible for Title IV-E funding for adoption assistance without the consideration of their birth parents' income. This provision will be phased in over a nine-year span and completed by September 2018.

New legislation and technology improve background checks

Over the past three years in North Dakota, there has been a substantial increase in the number of criminal finger-based background checks completed due in part to the federal Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act of 2006. This federal law requires finger-based background checks for all prospective adoptive parents, legal guardians of children, foster care providers and facility employees.

North Dakota legislators took child safety a step farther during the 61st Legislative Session passing Senate Bill 2162, which amended North Dakota Century Code chapter 50-11.1, Early Childhood Services. It became law July 1, 2009.

The legislation ended the CareCheck Registry, a voluntary child care provider background registry created in 1991, and put into effect mandatory fingerprint-based criminal background checks for childcare providers.

Currently, these fingerprint-based criminal background checks are required for new early childhood services providers and personnel including: directors, supervisors, providers, as well as employees who are eighteen years of age or older, and who have lived outside North Dakota and Minnesota in the last 10 years. This requirement does not include volunteers such as foster grandparents and practicum students.

To meet federal requirements in maintaining the integrity of applicant fingerprints, the North Dakota Department of Human Services' Children and Family Services Division invested in 16 LiveScan fingerprint scanners. These machines are inkless fingerprinting devices that electronically transmit data to the Bureau of Criminal Investigation (BCI) in Bismarck to complete a criminal background check. This new technology has streamlined the background check process and eliminated the mailing of fingerprint files to BCI.

Each of the department's eight regional human service centers received two LiveScan fingerprint scanners: a desktop model and a portable model. The portable LiveScan is available for county child care licensors, foster care/guardianship or licensed child placing agency workers to check out as needed once they have completed training on the machine.
